Fenton Burmese Glass By Debbie and Randy Coe This is the first and only book to completely address the beautiful Burmese glass made by the Fenton Art Glass Company. Burmese was an early heat sensitive glass that earned its name from Queen Victoria when she described the yellow glass with a salmon blush as being a sunset in Burma. All the pieces are listed by year produced and then whether they were regular in line items, special order, gift shop exclusive, QVC. Each piece is pictured with a caption that gives the Fenton code, year produced, sizes, and value. Background info is given along with family members, artists, decorators and other employees. It is a fact filled book that would be a terrific reference book for your collection. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Five Stars By Customer the book is an excellent addition to the history of the Fenton company's fine works 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Wonderful coverage of Burmese

Fenton's Burmese has been, and continues to be, the most popular of Fenton's creations. This book provides ample history behind the different types of Burmese, and the illustrations are beautiful. It's hard to capture in a photo the lovely blends of color, but if you collect, or are thinking of collecting, the Fenton Burmese art glass, this book is a good reference.

Burmese glass was developed by the Mt. Washington glass company in 1885 and was named by Queen Victoria because the shaded colors reminded her of a sunset in Burma. The Fenton Art Glass Company is the only company to successfully replicate the original Burmese formula in modern times. Fenton introduced Burmese in 1970 and continues to produce it. This beautiful book includes 719 color photographs of fine examples from Fenton's General Catalog, Connoisseur Collection, Supplements, Gift Shop, QVC, and Special Orders. They are organized by the year of their introduction. The major glass workers and decorators are also featured. Each caption has a ware number, size, year of production, and price.
